

COUNTY ALONE MUST SETTLE WOLF RD. DEAL

A lot of smoke has been filling the air of late regarding the routing of Wolf road from the end of the present paving south of the Hickory Creek bridge to the Lincoln highway.

C. M. Cleveland thru whose farm the straight line or the southwesterly route must go is strenuously objecting to the extension of the Wolf Road thru his timberland for his reason that it would destroy his property and from a public standpoint would destroy one of the finest natural woodlands in the county.

Mr. Cleveland has enlisted the aid of the Joliet Real Estate Board and the Joliet Association of Commerce in his efforts to get the county board to change the location of the routing on the straight line route as already approved by the county and state to a southwesterly one for which he offers to donate the land.

The history of this squabble is too well known to be repeated, but the fact remains that a lot of buck passing has been indulged in. The county officials pass the buck to the state, the state officials come back at the county with the statement the county is aware of the position of the state on the question involved, and then the county passes the buck to the Mokena people accusing them of having too many factions and not knowing what they want. The fact of the matter is Mokena has gone on record time and again for the straight route.

In a statement to the Board of Directors of the Joliet Association of Commerce Howard E. Leach, the chairman of the highway committee of the association says that Fred Francis, chairman of the Will County Bond Issue Committee and other members of the committee appeared before the Joliet Association of Commerce highway committee and stated their position in the matter. In referring to this Mr. Leach states in his report as follows:

"The Committee (the Bond Issue Committee) stated that proceedings had been begun for the condemnation of the Cleveland property so as to extend the Wolf road directly south from its present location of cement road and across the Cleveland property; that such proceedings were not being pressed.

"The Committee further stated that it had no fixed ideas as to the location of the road, but that there were no funds at present with which to either secure a right of way or build the highway due to the fact that the funds for highway purposes were tied up in the Will County National Bank. It was further stated that the grading of the proposed right of way across the Cleveland property as considered in the condemnation proceedings would cost approximately $6000.00"

This statement shows the bond issue committee is passing the buck again. In the first place they approved the straight route and had a fixed idea as to its location. In the second place why did they waste years of time before they decided to start condemnation proceedings? Why did they not insist on a settlement of the right of way question before the funds became tied up in the bank?

The solution of the question is up to the county board and the bond issue committee and no one else.

Let the committee show they are men and get down to brass tacks instead of using small boy tactics.

The people of Frankfort township have told the county officials time and again to get the matter settled.

The cry of taxes is raised. When the county bond issue was voted on it was said the bonds would be paid for by the gas tax. The cost of paving Wolf road to the Lincoln highway way will not cost the tax payers of Will County one cent of extra taxes as the cost of paving this highway will be paid out of the gas tax which tax is not raised by property tax but only from the gasoline sold in the county.

On this basis it would not increase taxes if the straight route cost $50,000 or more. So the cry of increased taxes is an exploded one.

It is absolutely up to the Will County officials to settle the matter whether they want to build Wolf Rd., as approved by themselves and the state or if they want to listen to Mr. Cleveland. Let the board show action. No doubt if a senator or congressman owned a farm along the Wolf road route whether on the straight route or the westerly one, action would have been taken long ago and the connection would have been finished by now.

No matter how hard the county officials try to pass the buck the fact remains it is up to them to get the matter settled.

The editor has laid the whole matter before the state highway department and has asked them what action they will take in the matter; and the following letter from George H. Baker, Engineer of County Roads, puts the matter up to the Will County Highway Department. Here is the letter:

"Your letter of April 3 to the State Highway Department, has been referred to me.

"We have a complete file in regard to the location of Wolf road north of route 22 and I believe I am personally familiar with all of the controversy that has taken place in the

Thieves Visit New Lenox Cemetery

Thieves have invaded the sacred confines of the Maplewood cemetery in New Lenox and have robbed some of the graves of shroudberry. Mrs. Bertha Groth of Mokena was greatly shocked the past week when she discovered that thieves had dug up and taken away shroudberry off the family lot. It is presumed that someone was hard up for beautifying their yard and consequently resorted to robbing the dead.

A Source of Pride And Satisfaction

The fact that the Mokena State Bank was among the state institutions to be released from restricted operation and permitted to operate unrestrictedly as before the national bank moratorium is cause for all the patrons of this bank to feel proud and satisfied. Of course, everyone realizes the work of checking up on the several hundred banks in the state is a job that cannot be done in a day or two. All cannot be opened at the same time and Mokena can feel pleased and encouraged to find that its bank was not only among the first to get consideration but that it was found highly satisfactory and in such condition as to meet the requirements necessary to re-open for full business.

The quick action of the president in putting the nation's banking on a sound basis has inspired new confidence all over the country and people now can feel assured that the banks opened are not only safe but a satisfactory and convenient place to keep their money. In this community the people deserve every commendation for the fine loyalty they displayed to their bank even in troublesome and uncertain times. Unquestionably it is this fidelity, loyalty and trust that has resulted in keeping the Mokena bank among the best in the country. It speaks well, too, for the personnel of the institution whose competent management and supervision has merited the confidence the public has placed in the bank.

Tinley Enforcing License Collection

Tinley Park has opened a drive to enforce the collection of the local village auto licenses. Officer Harry Uthe started passing out the court summonses Wednesday.

past.

"You ask what action can be taken or will be taken in this matter. This Department has only the power of approval of locations and construction of State aid roads. Since the plans, which were submitted to us, extending straight south through the Cleveland property were satisfactory from an engineering standpoint, they, you no doubt know, were approved sometime ago. Of course, we would consider any other alternate location where the design would be satisfactory from an engineering standpoint. The Will County Highway Department is aware of our stand in this respect.

"I believe that it is not necessary for anyone from this office to go over this location in the field again as this has been done several times. If, however, the County authorities desire a further investigation with them, I will be glad to go over this matter."

Very truly yours,
GEO. H. BAKER,
Engineer of County Roads.

According Mr. Leach of the Joliet Association of Commerce the Will County Bond Issue Committee has suggested that the present curves on Wolf road toward the Lincoln highway might be remedied and resurfacing of the present Wolf Road made at a very minimum cost which would take care of the matter for the time being and until the permanent road can be located, established and built.

SEEK AID OF PRES. ROOSEVELT IN ORLAND P. M. APPOINTMENT

Orland Park is very much aroused over the appointment of a postmaster. Last fall an examination was held for this office and thirteen Orland Park people took the examination. Upon the resignation of J. F. Schmadeke as postmaster, John Andres has been serving as temporary postmaster. He is a Republican.

Within the past week, A. J. Toelle, a Democrat, who did not take the examination last fall, has been appointed postmaster and has secured his bonds and has taken charge of the office. Since then a group of Orland Park citizens have circulated a petition addressed to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, asking him to appoint a postmaster for Orland out of the three highest applicants who took the examination last fall and who are Democrats. It is understood that quite a number of signatures have been secured to the petition in question which is to be forwarded at once to President Roosevelt.

Edw. Martie Is Mokena's New Mayor

In the Mokena village election held Tuesday there was only one regular ticket in the field but a real fight developed in the three cornered fight for police magistrate. John F. Schultz who has held this office for 16 years, was re-elected by a big majority.

Edward Martie was elected as the new mayor. The vote was as follows:

For village president, Edward Martie, 175 votes; for village trustees, Richard Hensel, 201; Wm. Schuhl, 191; Philip E. Hacker 205; for police magistrate Don C. Hall, Jr., 66; Tom Moore 76; John F. Schultz 116.

Various names were written in, some in a joking way. The election demonstrated plainly that few voters know how to write names in on a ballot and mark the ballot properly and a campaign of education on how to vote intelligently is certainly badly needed. The officers elected are:

Village president, Edward Martie
Village trustees, Richard Hensel, William Schuhl, Philip E. Hacker.
Police Magistrate, John F. Schultz.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

A CURE FOR OBSTINACY

JOHNNY CHUCK was stiff and sore. It was the day after the great fight. Johnny sat on his doorstep and he was in anything but a happy state of mind. In the first place, each separate wound made by the teeth of Reddy Fox had a separate and distinct ache. No one who aches all over can be in a very happy state of mind.

Then, too, Johnny was nervous. He kept turning his head every two or three minutes to make sure that all was safe behind him. That stone wall which had seemed such a splendid protection when he built his house in the corner of it now seemed a constant danger. Johnny imagined he heard enemies creeping up on the other side of it. He expected to see the head of Reddy Fox or Mrs. Reddy bob up over the top of that wall any minute. No one as nervous as that can be in a very happy frame of mind.

Also Johnny was beginning to be quite honest with himself and to admit that he wished he never had thought of leaving his fine home in the far corner of the Old Orchard. He wished he was back there. He knew now that it was the very best place in all the Great World. At least, it was the very best place for him. But he was still too obstinate to make up his mind to go back there. If there had been no one there he wouldn't have minded. But Polly Chuck was there and Johnny just couldn't make up his mind to go back and confess that he had been wrong in the first place. Of course, no one feeling that way could be in a very happy frame of mind.

But what made him most unhappy of all was the fact that he was hungry and all the time growing hungrier.

Suspenders Go Feminine

Adjustable slide fasteners on the shoulder straps shorten the frock for active sports and lengthen it for campus or general wear. An elbow-length separate cape of the shade of the jumper completes the ensemble for street wear.

He didn't go far enough away from his doorstep to get his breakfast, and he hadn't had much to eat the day before, nothing at all after the great fight. With longing eyes he looked over to the distant clover patch. After his experience of the day before he didn't dare go so far from his house. If he had been feeling all right he wouldn't have dared to. Stiff and sore as he was it was out of the question. He couldn't run and he couldn't fight.

He tried to eat some of the grass near his doorstep. It was thick with dust and so gritty and unpleasant to the taste that he managed to swallow only a little of it. So the morning passed and afternoon came. With every passing minute Johnny grew hungrier. The hunger he grew the more he thought of the delicious sweet clover which grew so close to his old home in the far corner, and the more he thought of this the more he thought about going home.

Late in the afternoon Sammy returned to see how Johnny was getting on. An idea came to Johnny. He would ask Sammy Jay to keep watch while he hurried over to that patch of clover and get a bite or two. Sammy agreed at once. But Sammy is just brimming over with mischief, as you know. Johnny was only half way to the patch of clover when Sammy screamed. Back scrambled Johnny Chuck as fast as he could. When he found it was just a joke he scolded as only he can scold. This tickled Sammy Jay and he flew away laughing. You see, Sammy didn't know how very, very hungry Johnny Chuck was.

By the time jolly, round, red Mr. Sun went to bed behind the Purple Hills, hunger and fear had quite cured Johnny Chuck of obstinacy. He would start for home the first thing in the morning.

APPETIZING DISHES

IN THE spring and early summer green foods—fresh vegetables and fruit—are more appealing than more complicated foods. There are some roughage foods that are needed all the year round and an occasional use of bran in food, or taken in water as a drink, will keep the elimination good. For the children the bran may be given in small cakes, cookies and macaroons.

Bran Date Muffins.—Break two eggs into a mixing bowl and beat with an egg beater for two minutes; add two-thirds of a cupful of milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth cupful of sugar and one-fourth cupful of softened shortening. Add two teaspoonfuls of baking powder to one cupful of flour, add one cupful of bran, one-half cupful of dates cut fine, and one-half cupful of nuts cut fine. Mix all as usual and beat well. Bake in well greased muffin pans for twenty-five minutes.

Calf's Liver Sandwich Spread.—Rub cooked liver with hard-cooked eggs through a sieve, using to one pound of liver three hard cooked eggs. Add one grated onion, salt and pepper to season. Mix well and spread on buttered bread. A layer of thinly sliced sour pickle will add to the sandwich.

Shrimp and Liver Sandwiches.—Take one cupful of cooked shrimps, one cupful of cooked chicken livers, one Bermuda onion and one green pepper. Remove the seeds from the pepper and grind with all the other ingredients; mix with a little mayonnaise or chili sauce. Use on buttered white bread for filling.

GRAPHIC GOLF

WEIGHT ON HEELS AIDS PROPER STROKE

KEEP the weight back on the heels is the advice handed out by MacDonald Smith. This allows the body to turn just enough to prevent retarding the arm movement as the clubhead is swept down and through with the arms. The shoulders are held back instead of coming around to the left ruining control and power. To offset too rigid legs in this position the knees should be bent slightly. A slight give here also keeps the golfer from stooping over too far. A fault of golfers in general is that they bend forward too far with the weight on the toes, a position in which it is difficult to pivot properly. One reason for this is that the ball is often too far away, necessitating

CRIBBAGE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

HALF of the game is what you throw away, And what you keep, before you start to play. And life's the same, Same sort of game— Much like a hand of cribbage that you play.

Count up your cards, not after but before, Keep what will likely make the largest score, Some joy denied And thrown aside May, at the finish, make you even more.

Discard the useless from your heart and mind, The plans unworthy and the thoughts unkind, Old hurts, old hates, And selfish traits, And winning will be easy, you will find.

Yes, keep the right and throw the wrong aside, The little jealousies, the foolish pride, Consider, too, The things you do, The evil habits from the good divide.

For they will win who wisely will discard The useless action and the useless card, Watch life the same, Then play the game— And you will find the winning not so hard.

Amnesia in Some Form

Seems the Common Lot

Writes Waldemar Kaempffert in the New York Times:

"Since January, 1930, the New York Times has reported 64 cases of memory lapses as serious as that of Colonel Raymond Robins. There must have been hundreds more of which the press never heard. Men and women who forget who they are, and who wander about pathetically—totally new personalities so far as the world is concerned—are commoner than many of us suppose.

"The truth is that we all suffer a little from amnesia or loss of memory. Who has not had the experience of trying to recall the name of a person or place, apparently in vain, only to have it flash up vividly in the mind hours later and for no apparent reason? 'Normal amnesia' the physicians call the phenomenon.

"Luckily we have the power of reconstructing and synthesizing mental records of past events. It is only when the blankness covers long periods of time that amnesia becomes alarming, that we lost all recollection of our real selves, and that we actually develop new personalities.

"Although they know little enough about the mind and its vagaries, psychiatrists classify amnesias. There are localized amnesias, which affect only certain groups of memories. A man may forget how to walk, for example, but not how to crawl or hop; his memory of writing may have gone, but he will still be able to talk.

"Then there are retrograde amnesias, in which it is impossible to remember what occurred immediately before some mental or physical shock. The victim of anterograde amnesia forgets experiences almost as fast as they occur. Paramnesias try to fill the gaps in the memory by illusions."

AFTER 40 bowel trouble

Constipation may very easily become chronic after forty. And any continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles and a host of other unpleasant disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. Whenever they need any help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot gripe; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, or when your tongue is coated; whenever a headachy, bilious, gassy condition warns of constipation.

SYNOPSIS

Antoinette Peyton, senior at the University of Marland, resents Paterson Thayer's attention to Ivy Welch, seventeen-year-old coed, and there is a stormy scene, the tension being increased by Max Vernon, another student, reproaching Ivy for "breaking a date" with him. Thayer and Vernon threaten each other. Larry Welch, Ivy's brother, professor at the university, is appealed to by Tony to end his sister's friendship with Thayer. Welch and Tony are in love. Welch does not see what he can do in the matter. Tony then tells him she is married to Thayer, but is his wife only in name. Larry determines to see Thayer and end his association with Ivy. Tony persuades him to wait until she has appealed to her husband. She visits him in his room at a fraternity house. Max Vernon, living in the same house, arrives and goes to his room. Tony ends her visit to Thayer and departs. Vernon leaves the house almost immediately afterwards, in a state of excitement. Welch's appeal to Ivy to end her affair with Thayer is fruitless. He determines to see Thayer. Despite Ivy's protestations, he does so, and after he leaves, Carmicino, frat house janitor, finds Thayer dead, stabbed. Reagan, Marland's police chief, takes charge of the case.

CHAPTER V

The town of Marland spread fan-wise from the foot of the hill on which stand the buildings of the university. Oak street, some three miles from the University, is the chief shopping center of Marland. Archer street carries the traffic load. It runs east and west. At the four corners which mark the intersection of Oak and Archer there are two gas filling stations and two drug stores. The latter, however, open on Oak street, and next to one of them, one door from the corner, facing Archer street and west of Oak, is the snug little gray stone home of the Marland National bank.

The Marland National bears an enviable reputation. It is small but staunch, and on its roster of directors one will find names which carry great weight even in the city of a quarter million which exists twenty miles away. It is spoken of boastfully by natives of Marland, and Randolph Fiske, its president, is a real power in the community.

This morning—the morning of May third—Randolph Fiske sat at his desk in the office which was marked "President—Private." He was a tall, well-proportioned man, fifty-eight years of age, whose hair matched the gray of his bank building. He had a fine, broad forehead and iron-gray brows from beneath which a pair of keen eyes peered in a manner which gave an impression of unimpeachable efficiency.

He was gazing attentively at a tiny bit of pasteboard. There was printing on its surface—printing, not embossing. It said simply:

James H. Hanvey
Bankers' Protective Ass'n.

Mr. Fiske's eye roved to a yellow telegram which had arrived two days previously from New York. It was from headquarters of the Bankers' Protective association and was very explicit.

"Our best operative arrives Marland morning May Third."

Mr. Fiske heaved a sigh of relief as he prepared to shift a very great burden to the shoulders of another man—one personally equipped to bear such burdens. He looked up at Miss Seward.

"Show Mr. Hanvey in, please."

Miss Seward put out a bony hand which trembled in protest.

"Surely, Mr. Fiske—not that man! The—terrible person who gave me that card."

Fiske frowned.

"I don't understand, Miss Seward. This man is a great detective."

"There's a mistake, Mr. Fiske. This person couldn't detect anything. I'm very sure of that. Just wait until you see him."

She vanished in triumph, and Randolph Fiske stared after her. "What in the world . . . ?" Then he smiled. At least she had prepared him for a somewhat uncouth person. Probably a squat gentleman with a brown derby, square-toed shoes, a checkered vest and a dime's worth of chewing tobacco. Queer how these detective chaps always dressed so that there was no mistaking their profession. Randolph Fiske saw the door swing open. Then it closed and Mr. Fiske was rendered inarticulate.

Jim Hanvey was everything in the world which one is quite sure a detective should not be. His two hundred and sixty pounds of avoirdupois was distributed with heavily inartistic effect; it wobbled when he moved . . . and he seemed to move with vast reluctance.

But it was the head which rose above triple chins that faced Randolph Fiske with awe. The face was huge and round and utterly expressionless. Randolph Fiske was quite sure that never before in his life had he seen a human countenance so utterly devoid of intelligence. It was—yes, by George!—it was the eyes! Round little eyes which were as vacant and colorless as the orbs of a fish.

The mass of flesh stood in the doorway. Fiske knew he was breathing; he could tell that by the fact that a rather remarkable contraption which appeared in the neighborhood of Jim Hanvey's prodigious tummy kept moving rhythmically. Randolph Fiske kept his eyes fascinatedly on that particular apparatus. It hung from a hawserlike watch chain and was similar to nothing which the banker had ever before set eyes upon. It was long and slim and seemed to be made of gold.

Then, without warning, the silence was punctured by a sleepy, drawly voice.

"It's a toothpick, Mr. Fiske."

"Huh?" The banker jerked himself together. "Wh-what's a toothpick?"

"This," Hanvey touched the trinket affectionately and detached it from his chain. "Swellest piece of foolery I've got. A crook friend gave it to me. It's solid gold—eighteen karat. Great invention: feller don't always have to be running around hunting toothpicks when he's got one of these. Look!" He touched a spring and a wicked little blade leaped out at Randolph Fiske. That gentleman gave a perceptible jump.

"It—it's very—very remarkable," he murmured.

Hanvey reattached the toothpick to the chain. The banker was staring and wondering . . . and then the opaque eyes of Jim Hanvey were raised slowly until they met the gaze of the banker. Hanvey spoke.

"I am kind of funny-looking, ain't I, Mr. Fiske?"

Mr. Randolph Fiske was completely stripped of the poise upon which he prided himself. He did not answer, but picked up the slightly soiled card which lay on his desk.

"You are James H. Hanvey?"

"Uh-huh. In person. Largely, I might say."

"You're the man the B. P. A. sent down here to investigate the robbery?"

"Yes."

Mr. Fiske was getting himself under control. He sought refuge in frankness.

"I imagine my actions have been exceedingly discourteous, Mr. Hanvey. I apologize and only wish to explain that you somewhat startled me. You see, you are not—well, not exactly the sort of detective about which I've read."

"I wish I was," breathed Hanvey ecstatically. "Gosh! I love mystery stories. Them fellers sure are slick. I never could figure out how they do their tricks."

"I Am Kind of Funny-Looking, Ain't I, Mr. Fiske?"

Another shock for the banker. He blinked.

"And you don't work like the detectives in books?"

"Golly, no. I ain't slick, Mr. Fiske. I don't hardly know any dinks who are. Lemme tell you something."

Hanvey leaned confidentially across the desk and his sleepy eyes held the attention of the banker. "My kind of work ain't so hard. And why? Suppose I go on a case. I start off wrong. All right, nobody's the wiser, and when I find out I'm on the wrong track—I start again. Same thing always. A detective can make all the mistakes in the world, Mr. Fiske—but if he happens to do one thing right—he lands the man he's after: see?"

"Yes—I see."

"But the crook, gosh! the poor feller hasn't got a chance. If he slips just one time, he's caught. He has to do everything right. The detective only has to do one thing right. And there you are."

Fiske had been studying his visitor. He was amazed now to find himself warming to the ungainly person. There was an almost childish simplicity about Hanvey which gave Fiske confidence—although he told himself that the man was a caricature.

"The B. P. A. wired me," he said slowly, "that you are their best operative."

"Hooey!" grinned Hanvey. "I've just been lucky—that's all. You see, it's this way: Most all the crooks are my friends, and they don't lie to me—so that makes things pretty easy."

The banker gasped. "Crooks are your friends? I—I never heard of such a thing."

"I guess not. But can't you see how much easier it makes things?"

"You say they don't lie to you?"

"Well, the high class crooks don't. Only the bums."

"Good Lord!" Fiske leaned back in his chair and regarded Hanvey with wide-eyed wonder. "You are quite the most remarkable man I've ever met."

"And the fattest?"

For the first time, Fiske smiled.

"And the fattest."

Hanvey's eyes twinkled for a moment. He fumbled in the breast pocket of his coat and produced two thin and vicious-looking projectiles.

He extended these toward his companion.

"Have a cigar?"

Fiske thanked him and accepted one. Hanvey bit the end from the other, held a match to it and inhaled with vast relish. He blew a cloud of smoke across the room and Fiske turned startled eyes in his direction.

"They are kind of strong," said the detective genially. "Some folks like 'em."

Fiske struggled heroically against the asphyxiating effect of the violent fumes. Then they got the better of him.

"May I open another window?" he inquired weakly.

"Sure. That'll be fine." Hanvey eyed the second cigar which lay unlighted on the desk. "Ain't you going to smoke yours?"

"I'll try one of my own, if you don't mind."

As the banker moved toward the window, Jim sighed relievedly. He rescued the unused cigar and tucked it back in his breast pocket with real affection. Jim's cigars were a source of perpetual worry: he was always afraid that some day some one would smoke one of them.

Fiske seated himself again. "You'd like to hear about the robbery?" he asked.

"Yeh—if you want."

"Isn't that what you came for?"

"Reckon so."

"Then why don't you ask me some questions?"

"Gosh! Mr. Fiske—how do I know what to ask? I'm waiting for you to tell me, and you're waiting until you're sure I didn't escape from some zoo."

Randolph Fiske threw back his head and laughed. "You win, Hanvey. Now—shoot!"

Jim's face did not change.

"When?"

"Day before yesterday—May first—at ten minutes after two o'clock."

"How much?"

"The robber got away with approximately one hundred thousand dollars in currency."

Hanvey blinked. "Lot of cash for a little bank like this."

"Plenty. We were making up the pay roll for the Marland mills. They pay on the third."

"Stick-up?" queried the detective.

"Tell me all about it."

Fiske rose and invited Hanvey to follow him. They passed from his private office into the bank proper. Under the amazed eyes of Miss Helen Seward, Fiske conducted Hanvey to the front door and gestured to the broad thoroughfare passing east and west.

"That is Archer street," said Fiske. "The north and south street is Oak. Oak is a shopping street, but Archer is the main traffic artery. Lots of cars going by here all the time. You will notice that this bank is the only commercial establishment on Archer street. Do you follow me?"

"Easy," grunted Jim. "You sure do talk explicit."

Fiske stepped back into the bank. "Our banking business starts at nine in the morning and stops at two. At two o'clock daily—and on Saturday at twelve—we get rid of our last customer. Then we conceal the interior of the bank by pulling the shades—so."

He stepped behind the open door and pulled a shade which rose up from the bottom of the door. The heavy green shade rose along the glass surface until it was higher than a man's head.

"There are similar curtains on both windows," he went on. "As soon as we get the last customer out, we pull the curtains up, and then all of the employees except two or three go out for a bite of lunch. They invariably go out the back door. That door, which is behind my office, opens onto a little alley through which you can pass into Oak street. Day before yesterday the bank was free of customers at two o'clock. We drew the curtains and shut the front doors."

"Were they locked?"

"No. They never are. We have safety vaults in the basement and they are open until five o'clock. There has to be some way for clients to get into the building. We merely shut the doors and draw the curtains to keep our banking clients out."

Fiske turned away, but Hanvey examined the door. He saw that it was equipped on the inside with a heavy spring lock. He turned and followed the banker.

Back in Fiske's office, the banker resumed his story. Hanvey lolled in a chair, apparently asleep. But occasionally his eyes uncurtained for a moment and he regarded the banker gravely before closing them again.

"May first was a perfect day," said Fiske. "Warm and sunny and almost like summer. As I said, we shut the door and drew the curtains at two o'clock sharp, so that the interior of the bank was effectually concealed from anyone on the street. At the same time everybody went out to lunch except Miss Seward and myself. Miss Seward is my secretary. She was the one who brought you in here."

"Oh!" said Hanvey. And then—

"Nice young lady."

There was no hint of humor in his heavy face, but Fiske chuckled delightedly.

"Efficient—and sour," he explained.

"But mighty loyal."

"I knew she must be something."

"She was behind her desk and I had just gone out to speak with her. At about ten minutes after two o'clock the front door opened. I didn't think anything of it—a box holder, most likely. The man—"

"Remember what he looked like?"

"Only vaguely. He was slim and quietly dressed. He didn't look like a crook."

"Crooks never do."

"He walked straight up to the cage where I was talking to Miss Seward. First thing I knew about anything being wrong was when Miss Seward uttered a little shriek. I turned around and saw the man was pointing a gun at us."

A Little Thing Like Clothes

"THAT," said Tom Winship, knocking the ash from his cigarette, "is the primmest girl in this town."

They both looked after the retreating figure of Daisy Miller, dressed so neatly in her blue serge, with a black hat that was meant to cover, not adorn, the red-brown hair.

"If you give me a month I could have that girl so dead in love with me that any one could see it!" Arthur Baldwin offered.

"You've lost already, and I'll put ten on it, Art."

Daisy Miller's heart beat very fast as she washed the dinner dishes. She had really not seen anything of Arthur Baldwin since they were in high school together; she had thought less of him, and yet tonight he had telephoned her to ask permission to come over to see her.

"I don't see why he should want to see me," she thought, "I can't understand—" and yet she was flattered and she felt a new glow in the dullness of the gray days and an escape from monotony.

In her own room she surveyed her wardrobe critically. The gray challis was beyond redemption and her best crepe needed a patch under the arm; the only thing left was what she had on, the blue serge dress that had never been anything but useful.

Again she felt that strange new excitement when the bell wheezed and she opened the door to Arthur Baldwin. He stood a moment in the hall retaining her hand.

"I am glad to see you, Daisy!" he said, scrutinizing her white face.

There was an awkward silence for a moment after he had seated himself in the comfortable living room in the big chair across from Mr. Miller.

"How're you getting on with your law?" Mr. Miller inquired.

Arthur Baldwin found himself in the clutches of that inveterate old talker, and he listened to drowsy reminiscences of the '80's, while he fidgeted in his chair.

When at last he said good night he admitted it was one of the duller evenings he had ever spent and quite unsuccessful except for his last remark to Daisy.

"You certainly have wonderful hair, Daisy," he said as he took her hand in the hall as he left.

He smirked to himself as he remembered the slow, almost painful flush that touched her cheeks.

"I'm old enough to know better," Daisy thought the next morning as she scanned the paper; but a new infection in the air had caught her and she explained to her father briefly that she was going to the city.

It must have been the hair that did it, but Daisy was unable to resist a hat that looked altogether alluring in one of the smartest shops on Fifth avenue.

But the hat made her suit look even older than ever; and Daisy plunged. She gasped when she saw herself in the new suit with its long, slim lines and its delicious golden brown color; with bewitching hat. But how shabby her shoes looked.

As a very last touch she bought herself a new pair.

"It'll take me years to save it all again," Daisy thought shame-facedly. "All the money that I put by for a rainy day!"

She settled herself down by the window in the train, feeling in her new clothes that she was too noticeable. She prayed that she would meet no one she knew. She moved over to a very margin of her seat as a big man sat down beside her; he looked at her casually and then cried, "Why, if it isn't Daisy Miller!"

"I used to be Bill when we were in school together," he laughed.

Daisy looked up at him; perhaps it was the new hat, perhaps it was the consciousness of that smart suit, yet there was a charm about that shy, bird-like glance that touched William Armstrong.

"Just come back to civilization," he explained. "I'm going to surprise my people. It's a long run from Arizona to New York!"

"How wonderful!" Daisy exclaimed softly. "I've always thought that was about the most interesting place to live—" then for some unaccountable reason she blushed.

"Not for your kind!" Armstrong said gruffly.

He touched tentatively the rich fur on her coat.

"Oh, this!" said Daisy with disdain. "As if clothes matter!"

"When a girl's as pretty as you are, Daisy, I guess you're right!" he said heartily.

"I'd like to drop in and talk with you about God's country!" he said as he wrung her hand in farewell.

That was why two days later Daisy Miller, answering the telephone, said softly:

"I'm sorry, Mr. Baldwin, but I have another engagement tonight!"

"Congratulations!" Tom Winship cried, holding out his hand to his betting partner. "When it comes to a lady-killer, Art, I must admit you never fail." He pointed a jeering finger to the notice printed in the evening paper.

"The engagement of Miss Daisy Miller to Mr. William Armstrong of Tucson, Ariz., was announced . . ."

Lesson for April 23

JESUS REBUKES SELF-SEEKING
(Temperance Lesson.)LESSON TEXT—Mark 9:30-50.
GOLDEN TEXT—Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law, Romans 13:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—My Playmates.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus' Test of Greatness.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Others First.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Sin of Selfishness.

I. The Stupidity of Self-Seeking (vv. 30-32).

Jesus with his disciples was on his way to Capernaum for the last time. He sought a way of retirement in order to be alone with his disciples so as to lead them to apprehend the meaning of the cross. The teaching which was interrupted at Caesarea by Peter's rebuke is now resumed and with definiteness he declares the future event as already present.

1. "The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men" (v. 31).

2. "They shall kill him" (v. 31).

3. "He shall rise the third day" (v. 31).

While pressing continually upon them the fact and necessity of the cross, he always showed them the bright side—his triumphant victory over death in the resurrection from the dead. The hearts of the disciples were so steeped in selfishness that they failed to grasp the meaning of his teaching.

II. The Wrangling of Self-Seeking (vv. 33-37).

1. The searching question (v. 33). Because Christ was omniscient he knew the secrets of their hearts. The fact that the disciples were wrangling about official position while the Lord was facing humiliation and death for them and for the whole world, shows how completely alone he was in his sorrow.

2. The silent disciples (v. 34). They were ashamed in his presence when the selfishness of their hearts was revealed.

3. The stinging rebuke (v. 35). "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all." The greatest men are those who are willing to take the lowest place and serve others.

4. The striking illustration (vv. 36, 37). He took a child and set him in the midst of them, thus in a concrete way enforcing his teaching. The child was an illustration of ignorance and dependence. By example and word he showed that true greatness is expressed by willingness to aid the weak, to enlighten the ignorant, and to serve those in need. All who render such service do it, not merely to the needy ones, but to Christ and God. True greatness, therefore, consists not in self-seeking, but in rendering cheerful service to the needy in the name of Christ.

III. The Intolerance of Self-Seeking (vv. 38-41).

1. John's guilty conscience (v. 38). In the light of the teaching of Jesus, John was disturbed over having forbidden a worker for Christ who did not follow after him. Doubtless, this intolerance was in part due to jealousy for Christ, but also for selfish ambition. Many times bigotry is mistaken for zeal for Christ.

2. Whom to tolerate (vv. 39-41).

a. Those who are casting out devils (v. 39). We should really satisfy ourselves that supernatural works are being done. Are demons being cast out? However, this is not final, for there is a supernatural work not of God (Matt. 7:21-23).

b. Those who are doing supernatural works in Christ's name (v. 41). All workers going forth in the name of Christ and for the glory of Christ should be given Godspeed, even though not members of our church or school. "Forbid him not."

IV. The Awful Issue of Self-Seeking (vv. 42-50).

1. Ruin to others (v. 42). Self-seeking usually results in ruin to others.

2. Ruin to the individual (vv. 43, 45, 47). In both cases the issue is eternal torment. Selfishness is opposed to God; and that which is opposed to him must be eternally separated from him. Self-renunciation should be so complete that we should be willing to abandon the most necessary and lawful things in life—hands, feet, eyes—when they become occasions for stumbling either for ourselves or others. No matter how dear or how necessary the friendship, faculty, or possession, if it leads to disloyalty to Christ, it must be forsaken. Spiritual surgery must be employed even when the loss is as great as the sacrifice of a hand or foot. Better suffer the temporary loss and pain of such separation than to suffer eternally.

Leaving the Gospel

"Wrong views of Divine truth among the people of God are always the immediate forerunners of a total departure from the Gospel on the part of a great body of professors of religion."—Robert Haldane.

Angel Feet Nearby

The dusty road is far more likely to be trodden by angel feet than the remote summits of the mountains where we sometimes fain would go.—Selected.

Bible Called King of All Textbooks

That professor at the University of Texas who is requiring students in journalism to practice rewriting stories from the Bible is but applying an old idea in a new environment. The English Bible has long been king of textbooks for him who would know how to write the English language. In addition to its instructional value, the course at Texas ought to serve as a chastener of vanity. Whenever a journalist, old or young, finds himself getting puffed up over his technical skill all that is necessary to bring him back to earth again, to make him know the limitations of his craftsmanship, is to set him to reading St. Luke's report of the parable of the Prodigal Son.

All things considered, there never was a better reporter than Luke. He wasted no words; he never spent time on introductions; he had perfect understanding of color, movement, background. His account of a shipwreck (Acts 27:28) has not been surpassed in nineteen centuries. It begins gently as a zephyr:

"And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence they sailed close by Crete. But not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon. And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive."

The wind did not rise more rapidly than the swell of the narrative nor did it subside more delightfully. Young journalists should get much profit out of trying to tell the tale better if only by the discovery that it can not be better told. The Old Testament is full of work of first-rate reporters. It would

Railroads Contribute Heavily to Local Gov. Support

The extent to which the railroads contribute to the support of local government is revealed in a survey of tax matters recently completed by a research committee representing the Mississippi Valley lines. This survey covers the levies of 1931, the last year for which full information is available.

The taxes of the railroads in Illinois in 1931 amounted to $25,873,576.30. Their taxes in Will County totaled $590,476.04.

Included in the county figures were railway levies of $314,735.29 for schools and $90,160.38 for road and bridges. Corresponding statewide figures show the railroads responsible in 1931 for $10,864,069.92 for school support and $2,425,527.42 for highway building and maintenance.

Levied against the Illinois Central System alone were: state total, $3,363,505.22; schools, $713,615.71; roads and bridges, $214,791.12; county total, $210.69; schools, $110.08; roads and bridges, $24.54. The Illinois Central System's charter tax, paid direct to the state, totaled $1,989,090.39 in 1931.

In hundreds of counties, school districts and other taxing units throughout the country they pay one half or more of all taxes that are collected. Taxes have to be paid. Do the other taxpayers want to pay the taxes that are now being paid by the railroads? If not, they must display something more than merely interest in railway traffic and earnings."

CHOOSING FOODS WISELY

By ADELAIDE SPOHN, Ph. D.

Nutritionist of the Elizabeth McCormick Memorial Fund and Director of Nutrition Service, Illinois Emergency Relief Commission.

How to Plan Your Own Menus

Although it is true that poorly balanced meals are all too prevalent in our diet, actually there are no deep, intricate secrets for preparing well-balanced ones. The "rules" for it are not much more complicated than for contract bridge, though they are much less rigid and leave more room for imagination. For your convenience in planning your own meals, I will give you a few simple, general principles as a guide to the planning of appetizing, healthful meals that are at the same time economical.

First, there are three classes of foods that are essential to health which should be included in each day's diet. These are: milk, vegetables and fruits. Everyone ought to have a quart of milk a day if possible; two vegetables and two fruits. One of the fruits might well be oranges or tomatoes, and one of the vegetables of the green leafy variety, such as lettuce, cabbage, chard, kale, spinach, turnip tops, beet tops, dandelion greens, romaine, water cress and Brussels sprouts.

Why do nutritionists say that these foods are indispensable to health? There are excellent reasons in each case. Milk is known as the most nearly perfect food because it contains most of the dietary essentials necessary to the maintenance of health, namely the vitamins, minerals, carbohydrates, proteins and fats. It is recognized as the one food for which there is no effective substitute.

Fruits supply necessary minerals, especially calcium, phosphorus and iron, and by supplying water and roughage keep the intestinal action normal. The citrus fruits, oranges, lemons and grapefruit contain vitamin C in generous amounts. Dried fruits furnish iron. Leafy vegetables are rich in vitamin A and in minerals. Raw carrots, lettuce, tomatoes, raw or canned, and spinach furnish vitamin A. Cabbage, carrots, lettuce and tomatoes contain a great deal of vitamin C, as do raw onions and sauerkraut.

I am frequently asked to suggest ways to use milk in cooking so that the various members of the family will be sure to get the necessary quart daily. It seems to me harder not to use milk than to use it, because so many dishes demand it. Cereals taste best when cooked in milk; creamed eggs, cocoa, cream soup, mashed potatoes, creamed vegetables, puddings and custards all require it.

Here are some attractive recipes using milk:

Spinach Soup.

Wash one pound of spinach carefully; cook it in a large kettle with

Famed Caverns to be Featured by R. I. at World's Fair

Carlsbad Caverns, the largest and most beautiful underground development of Nature yet known to man, will be featured by the Rock Island Lines in their exhibit at the Chicago Century of Progress International Exposition which opens June 1st and closes November 1st. These Caverns, reached via El Paso, Texas along the Golden State Limited Route, have been made a National Park by the federal government which recently installed electric elevators descending 750 feet into the earth for quick access to visitors. The entire Caverns are electrically lighted and easy trails laid over a distance of five miles.

A crew of motion picture cameramen and engineers visited these Caverns recently, under the direction of the Rock Island, and filmed some of the more beautiful of the rooms which will be shown at the forthcoming World's Fair. One of the rooms is 1100 feet long, 600 feet wide, and 300 feet high, and contains remarkable specimens of stalactites and stalagmites. These underground scenes will form part of a motion picture in color and sound of the Golden State Route to California.

Other features include scenes in the famous Pan Handle cattle country, resorts in Arizona, and California, the Apache Trail, Roosevelt Dam, Carriso Gorge, and the Pacific battleship fleet.

These pictures represent the latest development in sound and natural colors applied to screen exhibition, and are declared by experts to be the most beautiful examples of cinema art yet produced. They will be shown, along with other novel features, in the The Rock Island Lines exhibit in the Travel and Transport Building of the Century of Progress Exposition.

There will be no charge of admission to the Rock Island exhibit.

ORLAND PARK

The big 1933 revue starring Eddie Loftis, premier radio entertainer, will be held in the St. Michael hall in Orland Park on Friday night, April 23, commencing 8:15 p. m. Everybody is cordially invited.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Knox entertained the latter's mother, Mrs. Eric Forslund of Chicago over the Easter holidays.

Mrs. Lester Kay was stricken seriously ill the latter part of last week. Two physicians and a nurse have been in attendance.

Nicholas Steinmetz residing west of town figured in an auto crash on 143rd street near the Purple Candle Monday morning. He was driving west when a car going east side swiped his car tearing off one front wheel and otherwise damaging the car. The colliding car was also damaged. Mr. Steinmetz's car ran off the pavement near the Wm. Schmidt house and nearly hit the house. Mr. Steinmetz sustained cuts in the face, but was not injured otherwise.

The rain spoiled the open air Easter egg hunt which the American Legion had planned to hold in the forest preserve. The hunt was held in the Legion hall instead and about 70 kiddies took part in it. Eggs bearing prize winning numbers were distributed in various paper bags. Quite a number of prizes were awarded. The first prize consisting of a live rabbit, was won by Cyril Kay. All enjoyed a good time.

At Worth the Legion members in co-operation with the fire department also held an Easter egg hunt in the village hall.

The Easter services were well attended in all the Orland Park churches in spite of the rainy weather. At the M. E. church the seating capacity was taxed to the limit. Good Friday services held in the evening in the Orland churches were very largely attended and were very impressive.

The village board will meet next Monday night and the old and new officers re-elected and elected will be installed in office and the mayor will appoint the various committees.

Ten dollars was taken out of the Achievement Club treasury to buy athletic equipment with. Of this sum $5 was spent by the girls for a volleyball while the boys spent $5.38 for three bats and six base balls. The total bill was $10.38.

The grammar room baseball team are planning on playing two games each with Willow Springs, Tinley Park, Justice Park and Ideal school, a total of eight games.

The graduation exercises will be held at the World's Fair Grounds, May 19, 1933.

Country Towns Association Unafraid

The Suburban Area and Country Towns Association has been demonstrating that they are not afraid to face the issues and to assist the various civic organizations in getting all the facts in regard to the metropolitan area that is still pending down at the General Assembly in Springfield.

This has been shown on several occasions when the proponents of legislative plans for the consolidation of governmental functions in the Cook county suburban towns have been invited to speak before civic organizations. The executives of the organizations, for example, aided the La Grange Civic club in getting out the crowd for the address of Prof. Merriam of Chicago university. Prof. Merriam has a plan of his own that involves a state of Chicago and environs with the possible inclusion of a portion of the state of Indiana in the metropolitan district. He opposes the Griffenhagen plan as being too drastic and declares that no action should be taken without the propositions being submitted to a vote of the people.

As asked, as Alderman John Massen, of Chicago city council, had been to show where the proposed plan would work out economy to the taxpayers of the country towns, Prof. Merriam was unable to give any satisfactory answer. Nor have any of the proponents of metropolitan district plans been able to show the economy altho all declared that is the prime motive of their efforts.

Another of the pieces of legislation that is being viewed with considerable disfavor is the group of bills which propose to hold the township elections and the village elections in November instead of in April as was done this year. Most of the representatives of the country towns are in favor of the non-partisan lines that have aligned friends in village and townships.

They point out that the changing the date to the general election in November will inject party politics into all township and village offices with the result that the non-partisan character of these governments will be effected.

It is not thought that sufficient of the members of the General Assembly can be corraled to vote for this bill but the association feels that every piece of legislation should be scrutinized and the members of the General Assembly representing this district should be informed of the views of the association on these measures.

Speaking of representation, Prof. Merriam, in his LaGrange address commented on the fact that the country towns of Cook county were entitled to far greater representation in the General Assembly at Springfield than they were now enjoying. He understood there were four representatives in the General Assembly from Cook county towns and thought there should be at least twelve according to population of this area which is 605,000. It is a fact that the representation the Cook county suburbs now enjoy in Springfield is two state senators, Huebsch of Brookfield, and Barbour of Evanston, and four members of the lower house, Ickes, Foster, McGrath from the seventh district and Representative Slater of Evanston from the sixth district.

BUCKET BRIGADE, CALLED BY OPERATOR, HALTS BLAZE

When the help of outside fire departments was refused, a telephone operator recently took charge of a critical situation at Oxboro Heath, Minn. As a result much property was saved.

The emergency arose when the home of C. B. Armstrong, manager of the Oxboro Lumber Co., caught fire about 6 o'clock in the morning. Mr. Armstrong's home adjoins a lumber yard and other buildings, which were endangered by the flames.

Mrs. Bonnie Carroll, from her switchboard, called sleeping residents of the community, and then tried to get help from the Minneapolis fire department.

The appeal was refused, because Oxboro Heath had not entered into arrangements with the city for fire protection. Appeals to other places were also turned down. Mrs. Carroll then summoned residents of the town and told them to provide themselves with buckets. As a result of their combined efforts, the lumber yard and other buildings were saved, although it was too late to check the blaze in the Armstrong home.

Is the First Woman to Handle President's Calls

Acme Newspictures

For the first time in the history of the White House, a woman will handle a President's personal telephone calls. Miss Louise Hachmeister, a former operator for the New York Telephone Company, became chief telephone operator for the Democratic national campaign committee early in 1932, taking charge of the immense amount of traffic handled over the specially installed switchboards and other telephone facilities placed at campaign headquarters in New York. So ably did she acquit herself that she has been appointed to operate the private branch switchboard in the White House, where picture shows her, in default of males and then by collaterals if judged acceptable by the society. Individuals distinguished for their patriotism were to be admitted as honorary members for life and the state branches were always to meet on the Fourth of July, while the general society was to meet every third year on the anniversary of its founding, May 13, 1783.

It was agreed at the first meeting that in order to secure the fund for the desired relief of the widows and orphans that all the officers should contribute a full month's salary, as soon as congress appropriated an equal amount. This would make a very considerable pension fund, the interest on which alone was to be expended.

John Adams added his voice to the general clamor against the Cincinnati. The legislators of Massachusetts, inspired by resolutions from Cambridge, the university center, denounced the society as "dangerous to the peace, liberty and safety of the Union." A flood of pamphleteers joined the chorus of condemnation.

One of these, Aedanus Burke, a Revolutionary veteran and a judge of the Supreme Court of South Carolina, wrote a bitter pamphlet over the signature of "Cassius" denouncing the aristocratic tendencies of the society, which put the capstone on the condemnatory movement. The pamphlet was reprinted in every state and found its way across the Atlantic. A copy fell into the hands of Mirabeau, who translated it into French and published it in England.

Washington tried to stem the tide of opposition to the child of his sponsorship by advocating the repeal of the provision making the memberships hereditary. But it was too late. Public suspicion had been aroused and the patriots of the "rank and file" had placed their taboo on the order.

One of the most interesting results of the feeling against the Cincinnati was the founding of Tammany Hall, a counter movement in New York, nucleating in a society organized on the alleged basis of "pure democracy." So unpopular did the Cincinnati become that candidates for public office carried favor by denouncing "the aristocrats" from the stump and instances are related where men publicly divested themselves of the eagle and the ribbon at the polls, vowing that they had severed their connection with the society. Rhode Island went to the length of disfranchising all members of the hated organization and one by one the state societies in Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, Connecticut and New Hampshire abandoned their charters and the once propitious Society of the Cincinnati was in a fair way to oblivion.

The visit of Lafayette, in 1824, revived a temporary interest in it, but it was many years before popular apprehension had become so appeased that it was safe for a man who asked preferment at the hands of the American public to profess that he was a member of the honorable Society of the Cincinnati, America's first association of war veterans.

Europe Easily in Lead With Christian Sects

Europe is the most Christian of the continents, figures assembled by Dr. Olaf Morgan Norlie, president of the American Lutheran Statistical association, have shown.

Europe has more professing Christians than all the other world divisions combined, and the percentage of these to its total population is far higher than that of any other continent.

But all the Christians in the world total only 28 3/4 per cent of the population, the compilation says, their number being 558,027,965 and that of the non-Christians 1,416,049,560.

However, if Christianity is compared with the separate non-Christian religions instead of with the total, then it is easily in the lead. For its 28.27 per cent compares with 17.77 per cent for Confucianism and Taoism, 11.65 per cent for Hinduism and 11.09 per cent for Mohammedanism.

If, in turn, Christianity is divided into its major groups, the Roman Catholics comprise 15.08 per cent of the world's population, the Protestants 6.74 per cent, and the Orthodox Catholics 6.45 per cent.

PAPER LISTS PEOPLE'S TELEPHONE QUESTIONS

New York Times Receives 40,000
Inquiries on News in Year

What interests New York City? According to the telephone department of the New York Times, the news event of 1932 which caused the greatest interest throughout the city was the tragic kidnapping and death of the Lindbergh baby. It proved three times as interesting to people in general as did politics during the year, in spite of the fact that there was a national election.

The New York Times recently tabulated the number of telephone calls made during the year and found that more than 3,000,000 business calls and nearly 40,000 inquiries on big news events came to that newspaper.

10,000 Calls a Day

This is an average of 10,000 telephone calls of all types, both incoming and outgoing, which are handled by the seventeen Times operators every twenty-four hours. These calls come and go over 141 main trunk wires that virtually link the world with the 460 telephone extensions in the Times office.

The number of calls caused by the Lindbergh case made a new Times record. Between March 1 and April 24 there were 16,602 such calls. Politics, on the other hand, was responsible for only 6,150 calls during the year, and not all such calls were due to American politics, for the German elections elicited 1,308 inquiries, the Greek elections 348, and the Prussian elections 172 calls.

On November 8 and 9 nearly 2,000 inquiries came to the paper regarding the national and State elections. The Maine election in September proved almost as interesting, arousing 1,488 inquiries, while the Democratic convention was responsible for 1,417 calls.

Operators Must Know News

Football led the sporting events with 6,195 calls, while the world's baseball series was responsible for 3,989 calls. Prize fights provoked 1,235 calls, tennis 1,181, and aviation flights 1,017 while hockey trailed the list with only 60 calls. Among other sporting events were the Kentucky Derby with 121 calls and the Poughkeepsie regatta with 207 calls and the speedboat race on the Hudson with 94 calls.

Telephone operators on the New York Times are not only adept at operating that newspaper's private switchboard but it is necessary for them to be constant readers of the newspaper and to be familiar with every department, as well as its personnel. Knowing the events of the day aids the rapidity of service, and operators must be able either to answer all sorts of inquiries or to refer them to the various authorities for replies.

Fast Long Distance Service

The speed with which long distance circuits are arranged was illustrated on the night of the attempted assassination of the then President-elect Roosevelt in Florida.

Says the Times: "A reporter took up the receiver from his extension telephone and asked a Times operator to get 'Mrs. W. F. Cross at Miami, Fla., the woman who knocked up the gun aimed at the President-elect.' In less than a minute the reporter was conversing with Mrs. Cross, who had been traced to her home by the Times operator. As a result, an extensive interview was published the next morning. The call was put through in record fashion after 11 P. M. by Mrs. Theresa Reice, assistant chief operator."

The chief operator of the New York Times' telephone staff is Miss Mary Ann Timmons, who recently completed her fifteenth year in the department and her third as operator-in-chief.

His Instructions

The broker was very sick, and at times delirious. In one of his lucid moments he asked the nurse what the last readings had shown his temperature to be. "One hundred and one," she said. "Good," said the patient. "When it gets to 101½, sell."

President Roosevelt's Inaugural Address Reached World Audience

Franklin Delano Roosevelt, inaugurated thirty-second President of the United States on March 4 in a colorful ceremony before an immense audience surrounding the historic Capitol of the nation, was heard literally by millions of people throughout the world.

Radio stations throughout the United States and in other countries broadcast the event. The hook-up of the radio stations was made possible by the long distance lines of the Bell System and its connecting companies, with the result that the addresses, music, and other features of the inaugural were carried directly to immense groups of people everywhere.

A great audience in the Capitol plaza, and other thousands in the grandstands along historic Pennsylvania Avenue who had come to Washington to see the brilliant inaugural parade, heard the ceremony over the public address system which covered the line of march.

The reporting of the inauguration was an achievement of science. The impressive words of President Roosevelt taking the oath of office, and those of Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, who administered the oath, were heard by people throughout the nation and in other countries as well. News stories of the inauguration were flashed over the teletypewriter systems of the press associations to papers in the far corners of the earth.

Uninterrupted communication—telephone, telegraph, teletypewriter and radio—was practically insured by the storm-proof cable network of the Bell Telephone System companies radiating out of Washington toward every section of the country.

Establishment of this cable system received a strong stimulus from the disastrous snow storm of March 4, 1909, when President Taft was inaugurated. On that date open wire lines of communication were broken by the heavy snow and sleet, with the result that messages were limited to mail or personal messengers. At that time telephone communication was limited to a radius of approximately 1,000 miles. Today it reaches nearly fifty countries and their possessions.

CELEBRATE DAD'S BIRTHDAY BY LONG DISTANCE PARTY

An Ottumwa (Ia.) man, the father of a family of several children who live in widely separated places throughout the United States, enjoyed telephone visits from all of them on the occasion of his recent birthday, when a long distance telephone birthday party was held in his honor.
